

Social Narrative for LYNX Project concert:

Celebration through Song!

Where: Northbrook Public Library

When: Sunday, January 28, 2024 at 3pm CST

On Sunday, January 28,
2024, I will be attending a LYNX performance at 3pm at Northbrook Public Library.

Once I arrive at the Library, I can enter through the double doors where friendly people will be there to greet me and help me find my way to the concert hall.

LYNX volunteers as well as library staff will be able to help answer any questions and show me where to go.

As I enter the Auditorium, I will see the open space in the concert hall.

I will be able to choose my seat. If I need help figuring out where to sit, there will be friendly people I can ask.

This is a sensory friendly concert where I will be able to get up and move. I can feel comfortable in this space to make any sounds I need to and can exit the concert at any time. The sensory relief area will be set up in the Pollak Room A.

There will be an opportunity to write my thoughts and ideas on a banner at the event. The banner asks, “What will you speak into the world?”

During the concert, I will hear music and poetry. The music I will hear will be performed by a singer and pianist.

The singer's voice will be loud and soft at times, and they may sing high and low notes depending on the song.

During the concert, there will not be applause from the audience. Instead, we will wave our hands or snap our fingers to celebrate the concert. This will help cut down on loud noises such as clapping that can be hard to listen to.

The concert will be about an hour and 15 minutes long, including the performances and the breaks in between.
